ENGAGEMENT ACTIVITIES AND ACCOMPLISHMENTS

The Center for Families (CFF) was created in 1994 in the Department of Human Development and Family Studies by Dean Donald Felker, Associate Dean for Extension Ann Hancock, development officer Cheryl Altinkemer, alumni and donors. The inaugural director was Susan Kontos; I succeeded her in 1996. The Center was designed to take advantage of the unique role played by higher education in discovery, learning and engagement to disseminate knowledge related to family well-being and functioning to inform policies, programs, and practices. Center efforts focus on educators, human service professionals, employers, and policymakers. Specifically, the Center seeks to:

- Translate research on families and children into implications for policies, programs, and practices;
- Increase access to research-based information about families;
- Be a visible information resource statewide and nationally on policies and practices concerning families and children;
- Advocate for the use of research to inform family policies and practices; and
- Promote the study of families and children from a cross-disciplinary, life course perspective.

The Military Family Research Institute (MFRI) was created within the Center for Families in 1999, when MacDermid Wadsworth, Weiss and Green first received funding from the Department of Defense. In 2007, significant funding from Lilly Endowment expanded MFRI's mission to include engagement; MacDermid Wadsworth became sole director at this time. The strategic goals of MFRI are as follows:

- Support paid and volunteer staff in military communities that support military families.
- Strengthen the motivation and capacity of civilian communities to support military and veteran families.
- Generate important new knowledge about military and veteran families.
- Influence programs, policies, and practices to become more supportive of military and veteran families.
- Sustain vibrant learning organizations.

The Family Impact Institute (FII) came to Purdue in 2015. Established originally at the University of Wisconsin by Karen Bogenschneider, the institute began with a single state offering Family Impact Seminars, and grew to a network of over 20 states. When transitions in Wisconsin made it impossible to retain the institute there, its strategic advisory board invited the Center for Families at Purdue to become its new home. The mission of the institute is to promote a family impact lens in policymaking and to grow, sustain and support the network of states who implement family impact seminars.

Examples of major initiatives carried out by CFF, MFRI, and FII are listed below:

Shrinking Gaps Between Research, Policy, and Practice

Each of the initiatives outlined below focuses on bringing cutting-edge research to the attention of professionals whose decisions affect families.

- The Indiana Family Impact Seminar series delivers annual state-of-the-science briefings to state legislators. Continues. Seminars have been offered for 20 years, guided by a bipartisan bicameral advisory committee of legislators that is coordinated by the Center for Families. Seminars are funded with contributions from the Indiana Consortium of Family Organizations, a network of approximately 15 family-serving organizations across Indiana who provide financial and in-kind contributions. Briefing materials from each seminar are distributed to every Indiana state legislator, along with materials explaining the importance of a family impact lens during legislative deliberations. An agreement has just been completed between the Family Impact Institute and the National Council on Family Relations to produce a policy brief each year based on Family Impact Seminars across the states.
- The Rosabeth Moss Kanter Award for Excellence in Research on Work and Family, launched in 1999 in partnership with the Boston College Center for Work and Family, recognizes the 'best of the best' research published every year and disseminates it to corporate practitioners who oversee policies, programs and practices that affect millions of employees around the world. The annual review panel comprises over 70 scholars from around the world and corporate practitioners. No nominations are accepted; reviewers examine every article published in more than 75 journals to select the top articles and the winner. Companies that are members of the National Workforce Roundtable voted to increase their annual dues to provide ongoing funding to support the award effort. The Work and Family Researchers Network, the first scholarly society created for work-family researchers, also contributes to the award effort by creating and sustaining a fund to support it. The Jane Brock Wilson Center at Purdue has recently joined the effort to expand the dissemination effort by distilling and sharing key lessons from the research for implementation in corporations.

- The Award for Excellence in Research on Military and Veteran Families, launched in 2015, targets policymakers and practitioners who work with military and veteran families. The award process is similar to that used for the Kanter award described above. This effort is supported by the Association of the United States Army, which sponsors an annual event to give the award and present the research to audiences across the country; the Armed Forces Services Corporation, which has provided financial support and embedded the leading research into its staff training program; and Military REACH, a dissemination effort at Auburn University sponsored by the Department of Defense, which summarizes and disseminates the research to military and civilian practitioners, military families, and advocacy organizations.

Promoting Rigorous Use of Data by Community Organizations

A wealth of data is available from government agencies and other sources that can inform policies, programs and practices, but community organizations or decision-makers often do not know how to find it or lack sufficient information to be able to determine how their community 'stacks up' relative to others. The initiatives below work to close that gap.

- Measuring Communities is a social indicators project aimed at assisting communities throughout the country in focusing their efforts on behalf of military and veteran families. Consisting of a robust web portal with a variety of data elements, extensive mapping capabilities, and a wide array of user tools, the portal is available to organizations for application with their on-the-ground staff. It is used extensively by National Guard family assistance specialists around the country, as well as organizations in every state. The Red Cross uses it to make resource allocation decisions. MFRI is the first organization to successfully obtain demographic information by county about service members and their families for posting to the portal. A key partner in this effort is the Purdue Center for Regional Development. The site includes 'snapshots' of summary information for every state and county in the U.S.
- With the Cooperative Extension Service and the Business Research Center at Indiana University, the Center for Families published the series The Status of Indiana Families Today, a periodic reference volume of demographic information about each county in Indiana.
- Project EASe was a collaboration funded by the United Way of Greater Lafayette and completed in partnership with local United Way Agencies. HDFS graduate students completed reviews and reports to assist local agencies in strengthening their assessments of program outcomes.

Convening Community Organizations

Because of their unique position, the Center for Families and its associated institutes are able to serve an important convening role that provides opportunities to disseminate evidence-based knowledge and strengthen the coordination among community organizations to work toward common goals.

- Battlemind to Home Symposium Series. Since 2009, MFRI has collaborated with Roudebush VA Medical Center and several partnering agencies, including the Department of Labor, the VA Center for Community and Faith-Based Initiatives, and the Indiana National Guard to offer this annual conference for community providers, policymakers and advocates throughout Indiana. Battlemind to Home educates approximately 300 attendees on the challenges and opportunities related to veterans and their families. In 2018, the Indiana judiciary joined the effort with a 'legal' track focused on Veterans Treatment Courts.
- Since 2010, Stand Downs have engaged and educated more than 2,000 service providers throughout Indiana about the needs of at-risk veterans and their families in their communities. Stand Downs addressed basic needs such as food, clothing, medical, dental, housing, and employment assistance, but also have provided service learning and training opportunities for more than 130 college students. A toolkit prepared by MFRI has been used by The Points of Light Foundation to train others across the nation about how to create collaborative, community-based Stand Downs.
- At the invitation of the Indiana National Guard, MFRI co-leads Joining Community Forces Indiana (JCFI) along with the Guard and the Indiana Department of Veterans Affairs. Indiana is unique among the states in having its leading veteran and military organizations working with the land grant university in this way. JCFI works to coordinate military- and veteran-oriented support activities around the state.
- With support from the Alfred P. Sloan Foundation, the Midwestern Work-Family Association was created to bring corporations based in the Midwest together to learn about research evidence regarding employee well-being and performance in relation to workplace policies, programs and practices.

Program Development

MFRI has created engagement and outreach programs aimed at closing gaps between existing community systems and military members, veterans, and their families.

- Star Behavioral Health Providers (SBHP), which prepares community-based behavioral health providers to serve military and veteran families, has now been launched in 9 states. SBHP was developed in partnership with the Center for Deployment Psychology at the Uniformed Services University of the Health Sciences, and the Indiana National Guard, and has been recognized with awards from the Washington Center and the Association of Public and Land Grant Universities. MFRI was also selected to receive the Laura A. Wheeler award by the Behavioral Health Officers of the Army National Guard. Over 110,000 hours of training have been delivered to over 1,000 providers.
- Reaching Rural Veterans, was developed in collaboration with the Office of Faith-based and Neighborhood Partnerships at the Department of Veterans Affairs, and implemented in collaboration with Purdue Extension and Heather Eicher-Miller in the Department of Nutrition Science. The program completed a successful pilot test in Indiana and Kentucky in 2016. Over 1,000 at-risk veterans were reached, exceeding the goal of 300, 75% of whom reported household incomes less than $25,000 per year. Food security and connections to services significantly improved over the course of the program.
- The Focus Forward Fellowship program was designed specifically for women student veterans pursuing degrees at 4-year institutions of higher learning or master's programs. It is an enrichment program aimed at reducing isolation and increasing academic success among this population. It includes a residential component and online learning community, and attracts women student veterans from across the country. Four cohorts have completed the program to date.
- Operation Diploma addressed the higher education system in Indiana, working to make it more hospitable for veterans returning from combat deployments. Key elements of the initiative included education, advocacy and training for campus units whose work touches student veterans, the first longitudinal research study of recent veterans entering higher education, and a mentoring program and business plan competition for student veteran organizations on campuses. A 'secret shopper' survey of campuses revealed that policies became significantly more supportive over the course of the program.
- Our Heroes' Tree educated Indiana communities about the presence of National Guard families in their midst who were experiencing prolonged and repeated combat deployments. The program used community libraries as a delivery platform, providing kits of materials, and lists of high-quality books to purchase for their collections to support military families. Community members came to the libraries to prepare 'ornaments' recognizing heroes in their family to display for others to see. A publication series called How to Help was disseminated through each library. Each issue in the series, now numbering 16, addressed a different group of community professionals who might come into contact with military and veteran families in their work.

Engaging Students and Faculty

- A program for faculty partners was created in the Center for Families, which includes approximately 60 faculty from across the Purdue campus.
- The annual Kanter Lecture brings to Purdue the authors of outstanding research identified during the Kanter Award competition. Multiple units including Human Development and Family Studies, Psychological Sciences, Sociology, and Organizational Behavior and Human Resource Management collaborate to provide financial support and include the lecture in their regular departmental colloquia series, bringing students, staff and faculty together from across the campus.
- A family policy internship engages graduate students in supporting the work of the Family Impact Seminars and Institute. Thanks to funding from a former CFF staff member, the Levien Family Policy Internship provides endowment-funded financial support to the policy interns.
- Supported by funding from a former student recipient of financial support from the Center for Families, an annual Interdisciplinary Research Grant supports one graduate student each year to conduct family research with guidance from faculty mentors from two or more units.
- Supported by funding from CFF Advisory Council members, an annual Research Enhancement Grant supports one faculty member each year to mentor an undergraduate student to conduct research in their lab.

Supporting and Promoting Research on Families at Purdue

- Grant revenues have multiplied exponentially during my term as director.
- Over $500,000 has been awarded to support research and engagement activities by faculty, graduate students and undergraduate students.

- The Burkhart Award for Excellence in Research on Families recognizes Purdue faculty for outstanding research each year.
